What to eat in Treviso

The city is full of cafes, bars, coffee roasters, pastry shops, typical taverns and restaurants, and the tradition of getting together, being together and having "do ciacoe," "two some conversation" are the spice of every delicacy for the people of Treviso. In the city, the pleasure of taste and eating well begins as early as the morning in front of an excellent freshly roasted coffee in one of the roasting houses, such as the historic Goppion, in Corso del Popolo, and then continues with a late-morning snack (aperitifs here are also made before lunch, not just before dinner!) in a typical osteria, ordering a spritz or a glass of wine, here called "ombra." This is accompanied by a typical cicchetto.
